

PRESTIGIOUS WOMEN IN BUSINESS - SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

She's earned a reputation in Southern California for being the family law attorney for high-profile clients, handling their divorces, prenuptial agreements, parentage cases, and consulting for cases that demand the utmost discretion.

It's a niche that feels like second nature to Kimia Klein, an LA native whose law practice is filled with clients in the entertainment and sports industries. "I understand these worlds inherently, and I've made so many connections professionally and personally. All of my clients come to me through word of mouth because they've been told I know how to get results," she says.

Describing herself as an on-call attorney who's always responsive and available, Kimia says much of her competitive edge comes from her ability to blend a heart for advocacy with an unbridled insistence to never sugarcoat the hard truth.

Beyond Fox Rothschild, Kimia is a wife and mother, and a board member of the Harriett Buhai Center for Family Law which provides legal aid for low income families, particularly those who have experienced domestic violence. And whether she's advocating for those in her office or those helped by the nonprofit, she shows up with the same proactive approach and collaborative spirit so that she can resolve issues quickly and privately.

"Family law cases are sensitive matters and often require additional expertise into other areas of the law, including estate, tax, real estate and more," she says. "My clients get my one-on-one family law care with the benefit of a full service, national law firm, and this goes a long way in simplifying and streamlining the entire process for my clients."

