David's practice centers on corporate transactional law, with a focus on guiding emerging growth companies, fund sponsors and closely held businesses through every stage of the business lifecycle.

He advises founders, family offices, angel and venture funds, and high-net-worth individuals on entity formation, mergers and acquisitions, venture and private equity financings, fund formation and commercial contracting, often serving as outside general counsel. He also advises closely held businesses on mergers, acquisitions and the sale of their enterprise.

David brings a practical, business-minded approach to deal work, drawing on his own experience launching two startups to understand the pressures and priorities that growth-stage companies and investors face. On the mergers and acquisitions side, David has advised larger, mid-market companies on asset sales, roll-ups and strategic exits, as well as complex, multimillion-dollar merger transactions. He also negotiates a wide range of commercial agreements, including distribution and managed services arrangements, and supports high-net-worth individuals and closely held businesses with succession planning and governance.

On the venture capital and private equity side, David structures and raises capital for funds, family offices and accelerators, and guides companies through seed, angel and Series A, B and C financings. His client base spans agribusiness, natural foods, technology, healthcare and highly regulated industries such as cannabis and blockchain, with deep roots in Colorado's entrepreneurial ecosystem.
