Frank is a patent attorney with more than two decades of experience in patent prosecution and litigation.

He has counseled small and mid-sized companies and large multinational corporations in the development of U.S. and international patent procurement and enforcement strategies. He has drafted and prosecuted original patent applications in the fields of electrical and mechanical engineering, including applications relating to:

- computer software
- data storage and processing
- consumer electronics
- electro-optics
- food and beverage packaging
- medical devices
- aerospace engineering
- automotive engineering
- food processing
- structural engineering

Frank is familiar with all aspects of patent prosecution, including reexamination, interference, and appellate proceedings. He is also experienced in complex patent litigation. Frank has successfully defended clients against allegations of patent infringement, and has represented patent holders as plaintiffs asserting violation of their patent rights. Frank has experience handling inter partes reviews (IPRs) before the PTAB, including four such reviews covering medical devices.
